American College of Dentists

SOLYMAN BROWN, M. D., Secretary, American Society of Dental Surgeons, said:

“Among the primary objects kept steadily in view by the projector of this society and his professional coadjutors, may be alleged, first: The Public Good, resulting from the united efforts of the most distinguished and enterprising practitioners in the United States, aided by those of other countries, in settling the best methods of practice in all forms of dental disease.

“How much so ever may be done by isolated individual effort to acquire personal distinction and emolument, benefitting a narrow circle of patients, the true philosopher and genuine philanthropist embraces within the scope of his vision a wider horizon. Leaping with benevolent dexterity from the circle of selfishness, he stands erect in the unlimited dominions of Truth and Charity, performing the appointed duties of his sublunary existence for the benefit of mankind. Not so with those who contract themselves like the tortoise within their own shells, and make no excursions except for booty.”

AUTONOMY IN DENTAL EDUCATION

*"Caution and Courage make a good combination. Try to have a heart to resolve, a head to contrive, and a hand to execute."*¹

Here is a bit of advice particularly adaptable to dentists and to dentistry, at the present moment. It is applicable to dentists in the accomplishment of our daily tasks and further, as individuals in society, it is applicable, that we may gain and hold our places among men. It is applicable to dentistry now and that means all of us. This is a time when we must resolve, contrive and execute. We must resolve that we shall not be moved from that position which is ours in society and in the field of education. Then we must act—we must contrive to accomplish our purpose, and finally we must translate these into action and execute a judgment followed by blows which shall tell the world where we stand and why.

Men have labored diligently and long that the profession which we represent may become more useful, and now that that time has been reached, are we to sell our "birthright for a mess of pottage" or less?

When we were children we spoke as children but now that we are fully grown, let's act like grown-ups. It has been said that dentistry required less diligence in its study, less intellectual requirements to be met, and all in all, practitioners of that art not being held to a high standard, were therefore of an inferior class. Following such a noble injunction, therefore, it behooves medicine to become a foster parent to dentistry and supervise our study and our practice. Won't it be fine to be a graduate of a University, College of Medicine, Department of Dentistry? What will happen to dentistry?

Dentistry is an autonomous Health Profession. Autonomy leads to great development. It might lead to chaos if there were no centralizing influence or force, but that is exactly what we have in the University and that is why dental schools became integral parts of Universities. The University is composed of many colleges, one of which is the College of Dentistry with teachers of dentistry—men whose objective is that of making dentists out of young men and women who come there for that instruction.

Two Universities have recently reorganized their Medical and Dental Colleges—reorganizing the latter out and subordinating dentistry to a department of the former. Universities have the privilege, no doubt, of doing as they may wish or deem best. No one questions that. But we ought all labor together to find that which is best. That members of the dental profession have done well in the development of the profession of dentistry has been admitted many times by many eminent educators. Therefore wouldn't the better objective be, to educate men and women for dentistry within the family of the University, rather than within the College of Medicine? Three mistakes have been and are being made:

1. We talk of Medical Science and Medical Practice. Really there is no such thing. We have many sciences or fields of knowledge, many of which are in some way applicable to the field of medicine. But why call them Medical Sciences? Similarly with Medical Practice—men practice medicine but that isn't dentistry or law or anything but the practice of medicine. We are not part of that.
2. We don't know yet just what dentistry is, or what in reality it should provide. Will some one write a definition or prepare what might be termed the "philosophy of dentistry"?
3. As dentists and dental students we have adopted a laissez faire attitude—we are following the line of least resistance and are allowing the "assembly line" method of practice to be developed right under our noses and with our consent. We'll have a lot of "half-dentists" on our hands. If we don't watch out, the Goblins'll get us.

Finally, what to do? We must stand our ground—oppose and fight, yes, but that won't do much good. We need to find an Osler among us—one who can make us proud of our history and of our achievements, and in time, awaken the public to a full realization of the fact that dentists are men who accept and carry responsibility, who do add materially to the comfort and the welfare of the community, and who, without doubt, can accomplish this in a better way if given their own place in the field of learning.

The objective of all life is that life may be lived and enjoyed to the fullest—this cannot be the case, if one lives in subjection to another. We have just concluded a war, that certain Freedoms may be had—let's not lose ours. We must be cautious and courageous. We must put our hearts, even our very souls, into our profession and our work. We must use our heads for anticipating what may come and for directing what we now have. And by all means, we must be alive and ready for action.
